

Pol Solé-Navais is a group leader at the Wallenberg Laboratory, University of Gothenburg (Sweden), with extensive experience in international collaborative genetic efforts. By integrating computational biology with large-scale genetic and registry data, we aim to understand the mechanisms behind pregnancy loss and other pregnancy and neonatal outcomes. Our ultimate goal is to transform reproductive biology, advance molecular diagnostics and understand the fundamental mechanisms behind human development through the lens of genetic variation.